After the man's death an effort was made to communicate with his sister. It was found she had left the house shortly after her brother went to the hospital, and Mrs. Carey, the landlady, did not know where she had gone. The publication of the story in the newspapers came to Miss Kelly's attention, and last night she called up the hospital authorities and told them she was too poor to bury the body.

Then the case was brought to the attention of Assemblyman Fitzpatrick and Mr. Murphy. They at once cabled Mr. Goker the facts. Mr. Croker's reply was received to-day and Kelly's body was received to-day and Kelly of the second of the strike now than they did when he first reached here.
